Unhonored and unsung, so goes Sturmer.

Along about Christmas the twenty-dollar hog will be too precious to kill.

To all accounts the first town to fall before the Vermont soldiers is Niantic, Conn.

About now expect the Central Power Co. and the B. & M. T. & P. Co. to begin their annual fall advances on the city council.

When the Italian offensive is over the Italian road builder, who is at his best in the mountains, will come in for a share of the credit.

The assassination of President McKinley in Buffalo 16 years ago to-day was not the only momentous killing to be recorded in the first two decades of the new century.

We were waiting for the first fall frost to open the chestnuts until a contemporary ventured the old joke about the private who thought he was the only man in step.

A Bay state observer notes that Italian- and French-Americans are among the first to respond whenever the call to the colors is sounded. Barre's Italian population has not lagged.

Because of an indefinable interest which attaches to all murder trials, St. Johnsbury girls who knit while in attendance at the Caledonia county courthouse may be excused if they drop a stitch now and then.

One of the forward looking measures at the University of Vermont is the establishment of a department of automobile engineers, designed to train men as ambulance drivers, ammunition truck drivers and practical auto machinists.

Wild small fruits are to be had for the asking and the thrifty housewife whose delight in balmy September days is tempered by thoughts of the long, cold winter ahead may betake herself and her offspring with profit to the fields, where they pick well or sparingly of the blackberry. In your genuine blackberry patch all that is needed is to stretch forth the hand and a rich shower of fruit is the reward. Sunny hedges form a delightful background for a day in the open and one may stand within easy range of the bushes and pick a painful while partaking of the scenic treats all around. There is a large measure of satisfaction in coming home with a pail or basket "filled to the brim and pressing over" with the fruit that yields to none in flavor among our wild berries. It is such as the blackberry, the black raspberry and the red raspberry that we must recognize if our Hooverizing propaganda is to be fruitful of results.

THE HOUSE UNDIVIDED.
 A modicum of interest attaches to the experiment which Protestant worshippers in the town of Cambridge are making in the matter of church unity, and the outcome will go a long way toward determining the practicability of church union in the rural towns of Vermont. Cambridge is rather larger in area than the average Vermont town. Its 33,701 acres are populated by 1,695 people, many of whom reside in three villages, Cambridge, Cambridge Junction and Jeffersonville. We read that three churches, the Roman Catholic, the Congregational and the Methodist societies, are maintained, although with constantly changing conditions the work of the two Protestant bodies has not flourished in late years. Churches in the Roman Catholic diocese of Burlington have gained notable accessions in the last decade and it may be assumed that the prosperity visited upon the average Catholic parish in the state has not been lost upon the Cambridge church. Its position, therefore, is probably secure and in the present instance needs no additional consideration.

The rural evangelical church in all too many towns in Vermont has declined with the gradual change in the complexion of the races which populate the small villages and countryside settlements. The story of the Protestant denominations in Cambridge doubtless is a repetition of the history of any number of strongly organized rural churches which have suffered irreparably through removals and deaths. There, as in other communities, somewhat unimportant theological differences and unwavering loyalty to the foundations builded by the fathers have no doubt combined to postpone the day when members of all sects shall gather on a common ground, their doctrinal disparities subordinated and common sense exalted. Commendable cooperation on the part of Methodist and Congregational clergymen, it is understood, has worked to the advantage of those who have ardently favored church unity in Cambridge and to the leaders as well as to the followers belongs much of the credit for the present fine circumstance in which the Protestants find themselves.

feeble denominational bodies has achieved unexpected results and there is every reason to believe that the merging of religious ties in Cambridge will work to the physical and moral betterment of the town. The call for a combination of forces is the voice crying in the wilderness in any number of Vermont towns where two or three religious societies are eking out a precarious existence and if the Cambridge plan works out as successfully as present indications augur it is to be hoped that other towns will be ready to copy this sensible application of practical Christianity. Oftentimes it develops that two churches in a given community, running parallel in their existence, touch at many points and separate only where theological differences of comparatively trivial importance are interposed. Such differences should be bridged, if only for the larger good of the community.

MAYOR THOMPSON ASKS FOR $250,000 DAMAGES

Brings Libel Suit Against the Chicago Herald for "Anti-Americanism" Charges.

Chicago, Sept. 7.—William Hale Thompson, mayor of Chicago, filed suit yesterday for $250,000 damages, charging libel against the Chicago Herald and James Keeley, publisher, simultaneously.

He made a long public statement, defending himself against charges of "anti-Americanism" and alleging he had been grossly libelled by the "press of Chicago and others."

PLEADS GUILTY TO STEALING

Clifford Durant, Arrested in Greenfield, Now in Keene Jail in Default of Bail.

Keene, N. H., Sept. 7.—Clifford Durant, noted horse thief and a native of Surry, pleaded guilty yesterday morning in municipal court to stealing a horse of Fred Nims, liveryman of this place, on Aug. 16 and was held for the October term of superior court in $1,000 bail. He was unable to furnish bail and was taken to the Keene jail to await trial.

Durant began his career when about 16 or 17 years of age, stealing bicycles, and was before the court several times on that charge. Later he went into the game of stealing horses and the court has 12 specific charges traceable to him on that account. He also has had somewhat of a career recently in hiring automobiles with a chauffeur, who would drive him a considerable distance, when he would evade the driver, hire another car and repeat the performance, finally being taken into custody in Greenfield, Mass., Monday night.
